The organizers motives were largely to "improve common standards, foster research, and disseminate knowledge through meetings and publications. You could have concrete beams in a building that glow when stressed. Today science is moving us deeper into the nano-world of microchips and molecules, where new more refined forms of control are possible, where organic processes can be mimicked, modified, and augmented.

GE: One thing this brings up, particularly in the case of sensor technology, is that with the properties of carbon nano-tubes, for example, you could make a chair supported by legs almost the diameter of a needle.
