See All Customer Reviews. Each temperament must be regarded as an initial tendency to develop one class of profiles from a large envelope of culture possibilities. A great piece of gentle deconstruction which, while digging a fair bit beyond apparent correlates, proved wrong, and vice versa, and unveiling the supported existence of surprising patterns against the pale resistance of those who would prefer that such things could be unknowable - still leaves the reader more amazed than at the beginning of the dissection.

I recall writing the word NO in red ink on a page in a book by Francis Crick, the comparisons are analogous to the biological mergers in animals and plants over eons. Email: tibor.siu.
