What is apparent is that the language of poetry undoubtedly comes from the imagination. Translate to english. Ashe's Lectures, Sr'C. Finally, in the aesthetic judgement, the imagination, though still receiving its law from the understanding, is yet so far free, that its activity is determined not by the necessity of a particular cognition, but by its own character as an organ of knowledge in general. Thus does she, Biographia Literaria from Biographia Literaria states She doth abstract the universal kinds; Which then re-clothed in divers names and fates Steal Biographia Literaria through our senses to our minds. The second stanza discusses how the imagination takes material from the earthly realm and idealizes them so that they can transform into "proper nature," which goes back to Coleridge's idea of " the truth of nature" and the purpose of poetry.
