The lessons in which fatigue will become most quickly manifest are arithmetic and prolonged reading and writing, in which the fine muscles of the fingers and eye are most likely to become overstrained; but this is due to physical fatigue. Other features of this period are the marked development of the air sinuses in the face and nose, the rapid lengthening of the feet in the sixth year, and the tendency of many children to 'go thin' on account of the loss of subcutaneous fat.

considerable trouble. A false impression of gerontocracy may also result from the common situation where roles of authority, such as chief or sometimes elder, are held for life, so the average age of the official is likely to be much higher than the average age of accession to office, the latter being the true indicator of gerontocracy.
